

“I DO” DO-OVER

WHEN YOU FIND TRUE LOVE THE SECOND TIME AROUND, PUT ASIDE THE RECEIVED WISDOM AND THROW THE BASH YOU WANT!

Fun fact: Gary and Donna rented out the rooms at the Oceanbleu for their guests to be able to really enjoy the weekend.

In years past, there was an unspoken rule that couples getting remarried went to the courthouse and kept their vows under the radar. But nowadays those rules seem passé. Why should you have to feel like you're hiding your love?

One of the Hamptons' best-known event planners, Larry Scott (lawrencescottevents.com), has orchestrated plenty of lavish weddings for couples looking to hit the reset button. “A lot of couples want to embrace their second wedding, and [the events] are not small—like 250 to 300 [people],” he says. “Couples finding love for the second time want that do-over. It's the old expression ‘If I knew then what I know now.’”

Gary Segal and Donna Martucci, both of whom had been married once before, got engaged after eight years together. “We have been fortunate from the very beginning—we met, it clicked, and we fell in love,” says Donna. “And everything has been wonderful.”

With the rules set aside, Scott suggested a wedding bash with maximum visibility: an amazing schedule of events to close out the summer on Labor Day weekend, starting with the ceremony on Friday at Oceanbleu (oceanbleu-westhampton.com). The couple had a rabbi and priest marry them at sunset with dancing that lasted well into the night. The next day, Scott had created a laid-back summer paradise at the couple's Westhampton beach house with great food and music under a tent, volleyball and frisbee on the beach, and ocean swims (complete with a lifeguard).

“Larry is so creative and meticulous in everything he does,” says Gary. “Donna and I were so pleased with our wedding weekend we shared with all our loved ones.” —C.T. ■
